NOTES

Legal weed is here Michigan! Or, as the gov prefers, 'adult-use marihuana'.

Like a knife in the back you did not see coming, the licenses are being approved, the photo-ops are hitting the news, and the supply is flowing.

Well, maybe not that last part.

The vast majority of shops licensed by Dec 1 were all in Ann Arbor, as a way to pay homage to the age old tradition of driving to a college town to score good pot. Or at least I think that was the reason. Surely other shops, in other towns, applied as well?

Soon the vape cartridge Vitamin E Acetate fiasco will be behind us, too (if not already by the time you read this). Now if we could all please just stop using substances that give people crazy medical issues and side effects (looking at you, pharmaceutical companies) maybe we can settle in and enjoy legalization? Wouldn't that be nice?

Speaking of settling in, our offices have temporarily moved to downtown Bay City! Like a tiger preparing for the pounce, we will be here until the right moment. Thank you Bay City for sending your Parking Ambassadors to greet our arrival with little love notes on our cars. You keep us on our toes!

Merry Christmas to all, stuff those stockings with 'adult-use marihuana', and see you next year. It is going to be a good one.

MICHIGAN MARIJUANA NEWS

Recreational Marijuana Sales Begin in Michigan

December 1st, 2019, marked the birth of retail marijuana sales in the state of Michigan. Six shops were open and operating on the day. Four Ann Arbor locations, Arbors Wellness, Exclusive Ann Arbor, Greenstone Provisions, and Skymint. Meanwhile two small towns placed themselves on the map with Lit Provisioning Center in Evart, and Stateline Wellness in Morenci, being the only recreational locations outside of Ann Arbor.

Folks lined up outside just to get down, with rec weed.

News outlets covered the massive lines and people camped out just to purchase legal weed on the first day. Arbors Wellness gave the honor of first customer to long time Michigan marijuana activist and MM Report columnist John Sinclair. It was an historic day for marijuana legalization and the state of Michigan, and sales for the day ended at $221,000, not including $22,100 paid to the state for the 10% excise tax, or the 6% sales tax which totalled $14,586.

Ohio Police Keeping One Eye on Michigan Border

In what may be a startegic move, Ohio law-enforcement officials have stated they have "no specific plans" to crack down or monitor more closely the border between Michigan and Ohio.

"We're not going to profile people. We're going to just do our jobs," were the words of Robert Cornwell, executive director of the Buckeye State Sheriffs' Association. "And as we stop people for probable cause, we'll look to seach and go from there."

He does admit that officers around the state will not be able to ignore Michigans legal cannabis market, saying it was a "given fact" that more Ohians will inevitably be bringing more pot home from their northern neighbor. "It makes us more attuned to watch for individuals coming into Ohio with illegal substances," he furthered, "I think it will be in officer's minds."

Just a friendly reminder, Ohio is not Michigan.

Lt. Robert Sellers, a spokesman for the Ohio State Highway Patrol also stated his organization had nothing planned as far as policing the Michigan border. Although he added, "We do continue to moniter what is occuring in other states to ensure our troopers have the information they need to make sound enforcement decisions."

Recreational Prices Raise Black Market Concerns

While marijuana is now recreationally legal for anyone 21 and up and available for purchase in select retail locations, consumers are being met with exhorbitant prices. Ranging from $50-$70 for an eighth (approximate 'street' price $20-30) and ounces breaching $400 after taxes (an approximate street value of around $200).

Medicinal marijuana prices had managed to meet those of the unregulated market in recent years, with patients able to purchase flower at $5-10 a gram. One year from the day, licensed medicinal facilities now charge on average twice as much as an equivalent bag of weed on the street would cost. 'Adult-use' marijuana users pay these prices, plus 6% sales tax, plus 10% excise tax.

According to the Bureau of Cannabis Control, black market sales in California still outnumbered sactioned ones, nearly two years after legalization. Citing prices, but also availability as the reasoning, both issues Michigan now shares.

Vape Sales Halted, Vitamin E Acetate Testing Begins

After a string of recent lung illnesses related to vaping sparked a media frenzy, state officials placed a temporary ban on all sales of THC cartridges. Vitamin E Acetate has been identified as the culprit and regulations now require all cartridges be tested to ensure they do not contain the substance.

Vitamin E Acetate is a beneficial product, as long as it is used properly.

DL-Alpha tocopheryl acetate, otherwise known as Vitamin E Acetate or pure vitamin E oil, is a stable form of Vitamin E used primarily in skin care and cosmetic products. Having never been inhaled prior to being placed in vape cartridges, this beneficial product protects cell membranes from damage by oxygen free radicals, as well as preventing premature aging due to UV rays. It is readily available at drug and vitamin stores, billed as supporting immune and antioxidant health as well as being "pure enough to swallow". Found naturally in foods such as canola oil, olive oil, and almonds, it is not until it is inhaled that all benefits cease and the harmless substance becomes harmful.

Dozens of patients nationwide have suffered respiratory illnesses from the unforseen effects of inhalation. Soon after the media picked up the story, government officials moved to discover the cause at both the state and federal level. Reported symptoms of cough, shortness of breath or chest pain being the most common issues, but some patients experienced nausea, vomiting, diarrhea, fatigue, fever, and even abdominal pain. After extensive testing of supplied samples of vape cartridges showed a relatively common variable (Vitamin E Acetate) authorities began to suspect they had found the answer. While some cartridges contained as much as 23-40% vitamin E oil, not all samples contained it. Other samples were reported to include both THC and nicotine, a mixture not available in retail stores from any licensed provisioning centers or tobacco shops, lending creed to the idea that the real culprit was black market vape cartridges.

The halt on sales has met mixed reactions, despite most agreeing on the fact that Vitamin E Acetate should not be used in vape. Curtis Goure, owner of BDT Shops and Tobacco store in Hazel Park, voiced this thought, "It's been the counterfeit products where the additive Acetate vitamin E has caused a bit of hysteria."

Sales of THC vape will resume eventually, as manufactureres and retailers scramble to meet the new testing demands.

NATIONAL MARIJUANA NEWS

Warning Sent By FDA Regarding CBD Products

The U.S. Food and Drug Administration issued warning letters to 15 companies on November 25, stating that they have violated the Federal Food, Drug, and Cosmetic Act (FD&C Act) by illegally marketing and selling products containing CBD. The FDA has stated, "Cannabis and cannabis-derived products claiming in their marketing and promotional materials that they're intended for use in the diagnosis, cure, mitigation, treatment, or prevention of diseases are considered new drugs or new animal drugs and must go through the FDA drug approval process for human or animal use before they are marketed in the U.S. … Additionally, it's unlawful under the FD&C Act to introduce food containing added CBD or THC into interstate commerce, or to market CBD or THC products as, or in, dietary supplements, regardless of whether the substances are hemp-derived." Earlier this year 7 other companies also received letters issued by the agency. As of right now, most commercially sold CBD products are unregulated by the FDA, unlike the CBD products sold in state-licensed provisioning centers which are subject to state regulations and requirements such as lab tests on their products. FDA Principal Deputy Commissioner Amy Abernethy, M.D., Ph.D. says "We recognize the significant public interest in CBD and we must work together with stakeholders and industry to fill in the knowledge gaps about the science, safety and quality of many of these products."

$400,000,000 with only 36 legal locations works out to $11,111,111 per Massachusets pot shop.

Massachusetts Adult-Use Sales on Track to $1b

Hitting almost $400 million in sales for it's first official year of adult-use is impressive considering there are only 36 licensed shops in Massachusetts. Add to that the fact that none of them are in Boston, the most heavily populated area of the state, and you have solid looking numbers.

Averaging $46 million in sales per month from August to October means they could potentially breach $400 million by 2019's end, running the numbers forward places them at over $1 billion by 2021.

Put into perspective, Colorado's recreational market launched in 2014 with 306 stores and barely reached $300 million in sales for the year.

Massachusetts lack of viable purchasing locations has resulted in long lines, short supply, and high prices. Despite all this, sales march on.

Vermont Launches Weed Education Website

The Vermont Health Department has launched a marijuana education site called "Let's Talk Cannabis". Their intent is to educate the citizens about how marijuana could impact their overall health.

Reported to include science-based information ranging from the effects on youth and people who are pregnant, to responsible use among adults, it also includes information for health care providers.

LET'S TALK CANNABIS

"With changes in the legal landscape surrounding possesion and use, it's important that people understand how it can affect their health," said Vermont's health commissioner, Dr. Mark Levine, in a recent press release. "As with all substance use, consumption of cannabis can be unhealthy. Let's Talk Cannabis gives Vermonters the information they need to make safe and informed choices."

With 24% of Vermont high school students responding to a survey by saying they used marijuana in the past 30 days, officials are focused on the youth. "Marijuana use changes teens' brains, bodies and behaviors," Levine stated. The website aims to "provide relatable information to young Vermonters, so they can understand how the drug influences their bodies and thinking."

According to the site, this campaign was adapted from educational resources from the California Department of Public Health. To see for yourself, visit: www.healthvermont.gov/lets-talk-cannabis

House Panel Approves Bill to Legalize at Federal Level

The House Judiciary Committee approved 24 to 10 a bill to remove marijuana as a Schedule 1 drug under the Controlled Substance Act, effectively legalizing it at the federal level. This would give an official federal thumbs up to states enacting their own cannabis policies as well as well as incentivise them to clear criminal records.

According to the America Civil Liberties Union, weed arrests comprise over 50% of all drug related arrests in the United States. Meanwhile a Pew Research Center poll determined that a majority of Americans support the legalization of marijuana.

House Judiciary Committee members move legalization forward.

The bill next moves to the Senate, where Republican majority leader Mitch McConnell will decide whether or not to take up the bill. "I don't think a majority of the Republicans will support this bill," stated Rep. Ken Buck of Colorado, "It is even less likely that the Senate would take it up. Therefore, I would just suggest that we deal with other bills that we can get a much larger bipartisan support from."

Chairman Rep. Jarrold Nadler took a more middle of the road approach, "I don't think it is a good idea ... to say, 'the Senate won't take this bill'. When the House passes a bill, it's part of a continuing process. It's not the end of a process."

Both NORML and the National Organization for the Reform of Marijuana Laws are hailing this as the "biggest marijuana news of the year."

WHERE'S THE WEED AT?

On December 1st, 2019, the sales of marijuana to any adult over the age of 21 offically started here in Michigan. Unfortunately, retail locations are few and far between at current (unless you live in Ann Arbor). This will change, to some degree, in the coming months. In the meantime these six shops are open and operating:

(In Alphabetical Order)

Arbors Wellness -
(734) 929-2602
321 E Liberty St, Ann Arbor

Exclusive Ann Arbor -
(734) 494-0772
3820 Varsity Dr, Ann Arbor

Greenstone Provisions -
(734) 773-3075
338 Ashley St, Ann Arbor

Lit Provisioning Center -
(231) 515-1600
600 7th St, Evart

Skymint -
(734) 627-7360
1958 S Industrial Hwy, Ann Arbor

Stateline Wellness -
(517) 458-3800
989 E Main St, Morenci

Like other states who have legalized marijuana, the overall majority of municipalities in Michigan have opted-out. These soon to be out-classed dead zones for regulated weed fill a thirteen page document on the LARA website.

The official unoffical list of opt-ins is much more our style. It even comes with a warning label:

"This is an unoffical document compiled by Marijuana Regulatory Agency staff for informal purposes only. This is a working document that may be revised."

Last revised on November 22nd of 2019, it details which cities and towns are "cool" (so to speak) sorted by county. The list is not a valid representation of where you can purchase retail marijuana, or where grow facilites and processing centers are operating, but it does detail how many licenses each area will allow by type. With a total of 132 municipalities opting-in, each offering multiple licenses of each type, to varying degrees, it is only a matter of time until retail marijuana is reasonably available statewide.

In the spirit of fairness and accuracy it is important to remember that many of the opt-outs have voiced a willingness to participate, they simply want to observe what happens before they open a can of worms that would be rather hard to close. We have all waited a long time for legalization, some of us much longer than others. Many have spent time behind bars, away from friends and family, to get us where we are today. All we need is a tiny bit of patience and there will no longer be a need to ask "Where's the weed at?", because the answer will simply be "In Michigan."

To view the full official unofficial opt-in list visit:

WORLD MARIJUANA NEWS

Greece Moves Toward Legalizing Grows

Greece is moving towards legalizing the growth of medical cannabis. On Wednesday, November 6, legislation was submitted to parliament to be put to a vote regarding the production of medicinal cannabis, which is not legal at this time. The medical use of cannabis was allowed beginning last year, but the country does not have the legal framework in place as of yet for the domestic growth of the plant. Currently, the country is reliant only on cannabis products that have been imported.

Greece could get green light to grow.

Their Government has said the growing interest from investors could attract $1.85 billion worth of investments over three years from production and processing domestically, helping their country's economy grow as well.

Legal Weed in Barbados Passes Important Hurdle

The Senate in Barbados passed the Medicianl Cannabis Industry Bill on Nov. 27, just two short weeks after earning approval in the House.

Barbados may soon have medicinal marijuana, and a lot more Rastafarians.

The law gives the power to govern processing, dispensing and export, and anything related to cultivation, to the Medical Cannabis Licensing Industry. This newly created authority will also set rules for patients and license holders, and includes things like requiring they be citizens of Barbados, permanent residents, hold immigrant status, or be a citizen of a Caribbean Community (CARICOM) member state.

Of interesting note was the concurrent passage of the Sacramental Cannabis Bill, which makes legal the cultivation and consumption of marijuana for any individual whom adheres to the Rastafarian religion. Both bills were signed by the governor general of Barbados, Dame Sandra Mason.

Israeli Companies Agree On Six Ton Marijuana Deal

Two Israeli businesses have recently arranged a deal involving six tons of medical marijuana. Univo, owners of an IMC-GMP (International Medical Cannabis and Good Manufacturing Practices) medical cannabis processing facility, and is building a cannabis cultivation farm, has agreed to supply Shor Tabachnik Pharmacy for three years, at two tons a year. Revenue from the deal is projected at over ILS 60 million over the next three years.

"The agreement with Shor Tabachnik, which takes immediate effect, realizes Univo's strategy to strengthen our presence in the market and expand our distribution chain, whether through agreements with pharmacies or though the acquisition of a pharmacy which we reported this week. Univo is currently operating independently of other entities, and until cultivation begins at Amit Farm, we are buying raw materials from existing farms. The company has already begun production and sale of medical cannabis products under the new regulation," boasted Golan Bitton, CEO of Univo. This move places Univo as the only company in Isreal that holds full control throughout the value chain.

Brazil Says No to Domestic Cultivation, Yes to Imports

Brazil's National Sanitary Surveillance Agency (ANVISA) announced new rules for medical marijuana, with some surprising twists. Domestic Cultivation is completely banned, as well as flower, and use of the word 'medical' or any equivalent Every Cannabis product must now require a special prescription, and doctors are, by law, to be reluctant to prescribe cannabis.

A marijuana march in Rio de Jeneiro circa 2014.

Also included in these new regulations are strict Good Manufacturing Practices (GMP) requirements, and a mandate that any THC products over 0.2% be authorized only for terminal and "last resort" patients.

What is allowed is the import and distribution of clinically untested cannabis products. Speculators agree that this could set Brazil up to become the largest importer of medical marijuana products in the world.

Not yet publicly available, the new rules will be printed in the nation's official Gazette, taking effect 90 days later. Critics argue the laws cater directly to the commercial market, and not to the desires of the people.

Ireland Approves Imports from Canadian Company

Aurora, one of Canada's major marijuana companies, has announced it has secured approval to import it's cannabis oil prodcuts into Ireland. The Irish Minister of Health has officially added their High CBD Oil Drops to a regulatory schedule allowing them to be prescribed and supplied in Ireland, making it one of only two products to achieve this status.

Ireland signed the Medical Cannabis Access Programme into law in June of 2019. The law facilitiates access to cannabis-based medicine for a specific list of ailments; spasticity associated with multiple sclerosis, intractable nausea and vomiting associated with chemotherapy, and severe refractory (treatment-resistant) epilepsy.

Australian Researchers Make Known Discovery

An Australian study has clinically demonstrated that cannabis can be used to combat cannabis addiction. This bizarre claim was reported on June 15, 2019.

The University of Sydney and NSW Health conducted trials using a tincture made of equal portions CBD and THC, sprayed under the tongue. Their discovery? Using THC/CBD tincture helps reduce dependency on smoking cannabis.

"We've never had the evidence before that medication can be effective in treating cannabis dependency - this is the first big study to show this is a safe and effective approach," said Lead Author Conjoint Professor Nick Lintzeris. "The principles are very simialar to nicotine replacement; you are providing patients with a medicine which is safer than the drug they're already using, and linking this with medical and counselling support to help people address their illicit cannabis use." Professor Nick beleives his findings will give hope to people suffering from cannabis dependency.

Up to this point, Nabiximols (the tincture medication made from CBD and THC) has primarily been used in the treatment of pain symptoms associated with multiple sclerosis.

ELIZABETH HOLLIN'S

WITHIN THE MIND OF A BUDTENDER

Licensed and compliant. What does that mean? It means that you are cooperating with the laws necessary to operate. Call it what you will, but I'll continue to call it, in most cases, good business. In the Michigan cannabis industry, it means knowing that your products are clean, safe, and accurately dosed to whatever degree…but it also means dealing with the regulatory turbulence. After all, this industry still has much to learn.

Progress has never been easy. When we started the fight for legality so long ago, we knew it would be a long and difficult path. Often, for the sake of moving forward, you have to give a little to get a little. Sacrifice and cooperation.

On the afternoon of Friday, November 22, 2019 some of this sacrifice and cooperation came into play when LARA and the MRA released an emergency regulatory bulletin that temporarily suspended the sale of cannabis vaping cartridges with the purpose of inhalation at any licensed provisioning center, effective immediately, until new testing is completed.

By this point, I'd be genuinely surprised if word of the vaping crisis hasn't reached your ears. Hundreds of lung illnesses reported across the country, tens here in Michigan, and multiple fatalities. Michigan has, unfortunately, a claim to at least one of those deaths. There was also recent news made when a Michigan teen had to undergo a double lung transplant due to the irreversible vaping related damage. Though he is expected to recover, it has no doubt changed his life, and he may not be the last.

Vitamin E Acetate is believed to be the culprit connecting these illnesses. Often used as an additive in foot and face creams for its great skincare properties, there is very little research in regards to its inhalation. Doctors have linked lipids (oils) in the lungs to illnesses for quite some time now since they tend to coat the lining of your lungs, and they seem to be currently overflowing in the black market. How many people do you know that vape? How many times do you see one pulled out at a party, after dinner, or on a quick break?

Type dhGate.com into your browser and do a quick search for anything like 'ccell' or 'Dank Vape' and you'll see just how easy, and lucrative, it can be to start selling black market vape carts. Multiple investigations across the country have shown up to 90% of unlicensed product can contain the thickener Vitamin E Acetate that started to sweep the market in 2018, replacing what had been PGs and VGs. Not only that, but those bulk carts that can be bought so cheaply? They may contain lead, aluminum, formaldehyde, and more. Not exactly the things I'd like to have coating my lungs.

With the upcoming recreational market, and the current amount of medical users depending on their choice of medicating, vaping, I definitely think that this could have been handled far differently on the licensed side. The magnitude of investigations into the vaping crisis have linked the cause primarily to illicit carts. The items that you should not be finding in a licensed and compliant provisioning center. All major licensed Michigan players have publicly released statements in regards to the purity of their products. This new regulation has effectively taken the licensed products out of the hands of the patients and could push them back into the black market… where the root of the problem seems to be stemming from in the first place.

With that being said, I do stand behind the testing regulations 100%. Too many times I've had headaches, bad coughs, and a general feeling of sickness in the past from bad stuff. As we're seeing across the country, things can get far worse from simply not being accurately informed about what's in your product.

I've learned that off a tested 50mg distillate edible, I can achieve a nice high (I know, a bit of a light weight in the long term user category). When I checked out an unlicensed local spot and picked up an inexpensive 200mg edible that I was told was made with distillate, I was a bit disappointed when I ate ¾ of it and didn't get so much as a light buzz (not saying I expected too much, because I had assumed from the beginning that it probably wouldn't be accurately labeled). Now imagine you're being told that the vape cartridge you are being shown is 100% Organic, High THC, with No Additives. It comes in a nice fancy looking box, and it has little warning labels on it. Must be legit right? Now go get that cart tested. Let me know if those results come back all organic, no additives. Don't worry, I'll wait.

From licensed prices, to regulatory procedure there are a lot of aspects of the Michigan cannabis market that need to be improved upon, but our citizens safety should always be #1. You are inhaling these products. You are purchasing this product, from goodness knows where, heating it up, and taking a fat puff. Coating your lungs. Not too long ago we couldn't believe kids were munching on Tide Pods, and now we think it's crazy to think that the pen you got from your buddy, Kevin, may not be the purest thing on the market?

Testing, and purity standards absolutely need to be in place for safeties sake. Regulation, not prohibition. Is this the most popular opinion? Who knows, but I'm not willing to risk the life of thousands of individuals simply to make some cash. Something to keep in mind while you're doing your last minute Christmas shopping for your cannafam.

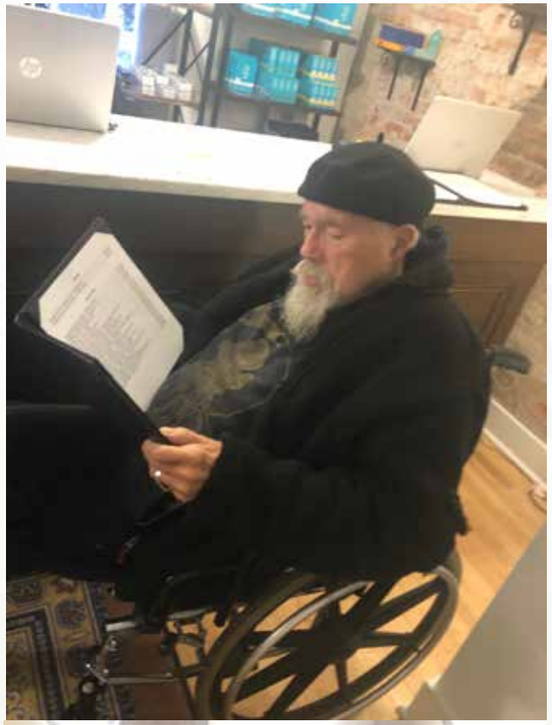
Recreational sales of marijuana officially began in Michigan on December 1, 2019. While many more locations will be open to those 21 and over in upcoming months, only a few, mainly in Ann Arbor, were licensed and authorized to begin sales right away.

Arbors Wellness is one of those centers. After 3rd Coast in Ypsilanti, Arbors Wellness was amidst the original cannabis dispensaries. Both are in Washtenaw County, an area traditionally favorable to cannabis use and is ripe with industry commerce. James Daly and others of Arbors Wellness knew that the intensity of this historic moment would draw a lot of attention and therefore arranged to highlight a couple of exceptional people as the first to participate in a legal cannabis transaction under the Michigan Regulate and Tax Marijuana Act.

Those two people are John Sinclair and Ryan Basore.

Although it has taken decades of time and the effort of thousands of people to get to where we are in the cannabis reform movement in Michigan, Sinclair started it all. The man who has become an industry icon started it all as a counter culture figure and self-described “trouble maker,” pointing out the hypocrisies in leadership and unnecessary policies concerning cannabis in the 1960’s. Ryan Basore came into the fold in the modern era of reform shortly after the passage of the Michigan Medical Marihuana Act with a center in Lansing called Capital Caregivers. He helped to transform the movement with an approach to protect what has already been achieved, to ensure individuals the ability and right to have cannabis and grow for themselves as well as promoting a sensible commercial market.

Both men have been arrested, convicted and their liberty taken away for cannabis activity. Sinclair took his case to the State Supreme Court where, in the 70’s, he was vindicated by a ruling that lifted all cannabis prohibitions in the state for a period of time and initiated the annual political rally in Ann Arbor known as Hash Bash. Basore was convicted in 2013 by a federal court for participating in legal state activity. Both men emerged from their respective ordeals with more strength and motivation than before they were senselessly targeted by law enforcement.



Joining in on the early moments of history was long time activist, MINORML board member and cannabis media expert Rick Thompson who recorded the second recreational cannabis transaction in the state. Rick was appropriately in the mix at the beginning of a new era for Michigan. After the press frenzy and accolades subsided, the initial group left Arbors Wellness to make room for the general public, which had lined up down the street and around the block. The diehards began the line in the cold at 4:30am, including people who traveled from out of state to participate in the event.

It was a fitting tribute to the people highlighted, but more importantly created recognition for the many who came together over the years to make it all happen.

CBD ~ GLASS ~ KRATOM ~ VAPE ~ TOBACCO ~ PUFFCO ~ JUUL ~ FINE CIGARS ~ BULK TOBACCO

By Karla Galli

The ham always seemed bitter, to always be lacking a sweetness, that never just did it for me. For years I tried to enjoy ham, and disapproved of the taste. I was making a ham one day and had these ingredients and started putting them together and over the years this glaze has been requested over and over again. For some it can be too sweet, but for our family this is the only way! You should keep this issue as some of the future recipes will call for some of these items.

Sweet Glazed Gravy

- 1¼ cup Vernors soda
- ¾ to 1 cup canna brown sugar (I like dark)
- 1 jar of Marciano cherry juice (use cherry's for decorating your ham while baking)
- ½ cup pineapple juice (juice from a can of pineapple)

Combine all the ingredients in medium sauce pan on medium until sugar is dissolved, let thicken a little bit before using for other purposes. Decorate ham with pineapples, cherry's. Bake ham as directed, use glaze over ham in your oven from start to finish if you desire, that's what I do, then I keep basting the ham over every so often, decorate with pineapple slices, and marciano cherry, potatoes, biscuits, vegetables, or other favorites. Yes it's supposed to be thin, sticky, and addicting. I only do this once a year! You probably won't use all the glaze over the ham but it's an awesome topper!

Canna Sugar is not a secret. I have been able to share this with a few of you in the community and some have been very successful with its uses. I'm glad to be able to give you an opportunity to share this with those of you who have wanted and asked for years about how to bring this into your kitchen to use as you desire. Use your canna sugar in cooking, baking, Kool aid, coffee, tea, pixie sticks, hard candy, anything that calls for sugar or anything you desire. The possibilities are endless.

Canna Sugar

1. 1 to 2 tablespoons of Tincture
2. 1 cup of sugar (any kind cane, white, brown, sugar-free be patient it works)
3. Combine sugar and tincture in a bowl, distribute evenly throughout
4. heat oven to 200°
5. Break up sugar every 15 minutes until sugar is dry
6. Let cool at room temperature, store in container until use

Tincture has many uses medicinal for pain, headaches, muscle spasms, seizure, tension, insomnia or if you have pain on your left side, place a dropper full on left side of and let dissolve naturally in left cheek. Try the right side. If both sides hurt, use on both sides. Tincture can also be used in place of several ingredients such as extracts, or water.

Tincture

- 80 proof or better 750ml of Ever clear high grain alcohol
- 1 oz. or better of decarboxylate high grade Marijuana buds more if trim is used about double

1. Decarboxylate (See MM Report October2019 Vol 1 Issue11) your buds
2. Combine Ever clear and buds together in 32oz Mason jar.
3. Shake jar for 15 minutes
4. Sift through cheesecloth
5. Strain through several coffee filters
6. Cover with cheese cloth and Exhaust in front of fan for 48 hours
7. Tincture is now ready to use, Store in sterile jar or dropper bottle

Methadone to Marijuana

Driven to cure opioid addiction, PTSD and provide relief to countless patients suffering daily, Steve Goldner is delivering on the promise of "Cannabis as Medicine."

Michiganders have a lot to be thankful for this holiday season, particularly that police actions against marijuana have nearly ground to a halt. In addition, our elected officials now fully support our 'free the weed' movement; and Michigan friendly scientists and doctors are in the forefront of creating safer and more effective cannabis-related products. Among these is a product called Parachute, which enables cannabis users to land safely when they get "too high."

Steve Goldner, CEO Pure Green

We checked out Pure Green, the company that created Parachute (which is easily administered via special sublingual tablets) and found an amazing scientist and a doctor behind it all. The scientist, Steve Goldner, actually invented the liquid form of Methadone in 1972 (when he was just 23 years old) to help his heroin addicted Viet Nam veteran buddies.

"My buddies were coming back from the Viet Nam War and some of them had picked up the heroin habit. I wanted to help them," Steve explains. "Most people thought that these heroin addicts were just 'scum of the earth.' But they were my buddies, valiant war fighters who had gone down bad roads. I searched the medical literature for remedies that might ease pain, and discovered some molecules invented in Germany in the 1930's. Along with my mentor, John Broich, I repurposed the molecules, made them into a drinkable liquid, added Tang for flavor and color, and then Metamucil to ease constipation. That made a one-ounce drink with enough active ingredient to replace heroin for one day. It's called Methadone and I hoped it would get people off heroin, and then over time they could reduce their dosage and ultimately get off of the Methadone."

Steve was working as a forensic toxicologist at the New York Medical Examiner's Office at that time. He helped solve dozens of difficult murder cases using science while working on 18,000 autopsies. He says, "There was a saying over the front door of the morgue: 'This is the place where death delights in helping the living.' So, I had to help my buddies."

Steve built a drug manufacturing company to produce Methadone and ran it for three years. He sold it to a large drug company that built more production centers worldwide, helping to save more than 20 million people from heroin addiction. Then he went to law school, becoming a highly sought out attorney specializing in FDA issues. He's gotten more than 250 medical devices and 20 drugs approved.

But how Steve became a famous cannabis scientist (he invented THC and CBD water-soluble molecules) and the CEO of Pure Green is more compelling. As he explains, "One of my buddies came back from Viet Nam with Post Traumatic Stress Disorder (PTSD). He was a true hero who had saved his platoon from an ambush and sustained serious wounds. He never got over the anxiety and night fears from that war. He appreciated that my Methadone helped our buddies kick heroin, but he kept asking me to make a drug for his extreme anxiety. I noticed that he got worse when he was drinking or using pills from the VA, but he was calm, happy and pain free when he smoked marijuana. I told him that he didn't need me to make a drug, as he already one. But Pot was illegal. He made me take a vow that I would create a real PTSD medicine. John died seven years ago. The cannabis legalization revolution allowed me to make these pure medications for PTSD, and a dozen more, from cannabis ingredients."

Pure Green's latest product, Parachute, is a great example of the cannabis industry solving its own problems. As people sometimes get too high from edibles, Parachute is made from pure CBD and four terpenes, working in eight minutes to lessen the effects of an intense high. The CBD is made water-soluble using Goldner's patent-pending process and then pressed into a fast disintegrating tablet that gets the cannabinoids into a person's blood stream in 60 seconds, and throughout the body in eight minutes.

Goldner is pretty frank when it comes to discussing his views on cannabis, and how it has gotten a bad reputation that it doesn't deserve. "Cannabis is so safe, it's ridiculous. No drug developer has ever seen molecules like the ones that the cannabis plant produces when it comes to safety and efficacy. Nobody has ever died from using the cannabis plant—in centuries of worldwide use. And cannabis is effective for pain relief, anxiety relief, sleep aid and nearly two dozen other real-life problems. Plus, it is easy to use."

"The cannabis legalization revolution allowed me to make these pure medications for PTSD, and a dozen more, from cannabis ingredients."

- Steve Goldner, CEO Pure Green

Goldner's work is different from most other cannabis processors across the country, because of the amount of clinical testing Pure Green conducts on its tablet products. "Cannabis is real medicine. Scientists have been unable to study it because it has been illegal. But this situation is changing. We've run eight clinical trials, with many of them posted on www.clinicaltrials.gov, the National Institutes of Health clearinghouse for significant clinical trials. We are running three clinical trials right now for pain relief from diabetes, osteoarthritis, and for women with painful menstrual periods. We've met with the FDA several times and they have given FAST TRACK status to our dog pain relief tablets."

The Pure Green doctor mentioned earlier in this article is Dr. Deb Kimless. She worked as an anesthesiologist for 25 years until a friend suggested that she give cannabis to her ailing Mom. Deb studied the medical science behind marijuana, traveled the world to study with the best cannabis physicians, and volunteered to treat people using cannabis remedies, alongside traditional medicine, without charging any fees.

These clinical trials are important because medical marijuana patients find that some products work better for their symptoms than others. There's no "one-size fits all" when it comes to getting relief, and as a result, educated patients are not only paying attention to the THC/CBD potency, but also to the terpenes present in products. This balance produces an entourage effect and is responsible for symptom-specific relief.

"The entourage effect is very real" Steve explains. "Physicians treat cancer patients with a combination of medications, called 'drug cocktails.' The FDA usually insists that each drug has only one active ingredient. That's why doctors combine medications, tailoring mixtures for each patient. We used that idea to combine pure THC with pure CBD and curated terpenes. Then volunteers tried our tablets in clinical trials to learn what mixtures work best to help them sleep, relieve pain and relieve anxiety."

So, what does Goldner think about how easy it is for consumers to get accurate information about the products they're using (especially flower)? "Relying on strain names is not as straight forward as consumers would like to believe" he says. "Some growers and dispensaries change the names on cannabis strains to maximize their profits. Saying this will not make me popular with some people, but I think it's important to be honest to our customers and patients. So how do we prove honesty? How do we make the best possible cannabis products? Simple–we lab test every batch multiple times, we publish our results, and I put my name on the license. Plus we are working to get our products approved by FDA to make these medications available worldwide. "

While Steve works on worldwide availability, you can find Pure Green tablets, including Parachute, at provisioning centers across the state of Michigan. For more information on their family of products, visit www.pure.green. If you have any specific questions about the products or their formulation, email contact@pure.green. Steve responds personally to the majority of questions of a scientific nature.

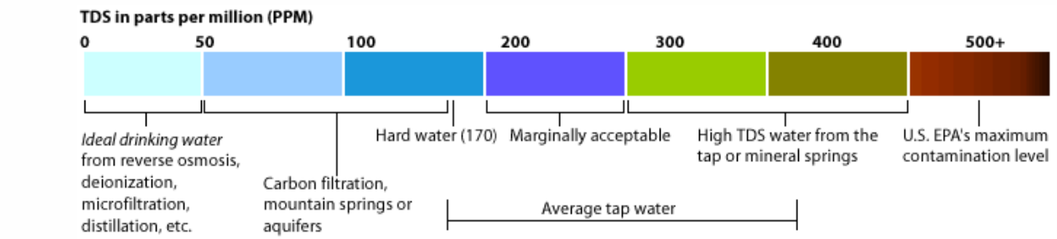
GROW TIPS

clean water, please

By Ben Horner

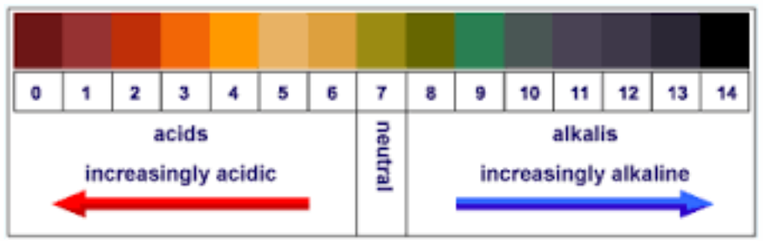
The purity of the water that we drink and use to water our plants should be the concern of everyone. Your health and that of your plants can be diminished by water that is loaded with chlorine, iron and other minerals, as well as bacteria and other nasty microscopic bugs.

When watering your plants the wise grower uses purified water whenever possible. Reverse osmosis (RO) systems and bulk filters are often attached to a fifty-gallon drum with a float value to insure a steady reserve of pure water. Using a TDS meter to test for Total Dissolved Solids, growers can determine how many residual solids are still left in the water after filtering.



Pure water should test below 50ppm (parts per million), if you have hard water consider using a RO water purification system, or adjust your nutrient line to compensate.

After adding nutrients the TDS will raise. For Hydroponics, readings between 800-1400 are typical, but for coco and perlite substrates 600-1200 is more ideal. For soilless/soil mixtures 300-600 should be your max, alternating between watering with nutrients and straight water to flush.



PH is also really important when feeding your plants. Ideally your water should be between 6-7 PH. Products like Ph UP and PH Down can help you stabilize you PH.

HOROSCOPES

What do the stars have in store for you this month? Why do you even want to know?

ARIES
March 21 - April 19

The stars declare the future to be more important than anything else in your life right now. Which is not really saying much seeing as how your past and present are total shit.

TAURUS
April 20 - May 20

Money is not in the cards for you this month, Taurus. Webcam door bells sure have ruined stealing Christmas gifts off porches, am I right?

GEMINI
May 21 - June 20

Others who are close to you, such as family, will help you achieve your goals in December. We say 'such as', because everyone knows your family hates you and wishes you nothing but failure.

CANCER
June 21 - July 22

Cancer will find themselves governed by others in the month of December, as finances and career fall into turmoil. Cheap BDSM webcam work is sure to look great on your resume, though.

LEO
July 23 - August 22

Entertainment and socializing underscore a month of tightened bonds between loved ones for Leo. Of course, it is Christmas. Once the holiday wears off you'll go back to talking shit about them.

VIRGO
August 23 - September 22

Virgo will go out of their way to create an awesome relationship in December. For you that is, the person being stalked will more than likely not call it awesome.

LIBRA
September 23 - October 22

The planets say you are determined to develop your career while keeping your family intact. Or at least they would if they could make it through the words without laughing hysterically, slapping each other on the back, and pointing at you.

SCORPIO
October 23 - November 21

It will be a great month for money, with fun and entertainment on the horizon. Flash forward to next month where you lament about your financial situation and beg people for hand outs, as usual.

SAGITTARIUS
November 22 - December 21

You will visit new places and exotic destinations with your loved ones this month. The difficult part will be convincing the people at the Chinese Buffet to let you bring your pets in on a busy day like Christmas.

CAPRICORN
December 22 - January 19

A great month for finances, but you will be spending a lot on family expenses and personal luxuries. And as long as you keep the money flowing they will never realize just how selfish you are.

AQUARIUS
January 20 - February 18

November is a good month for love and relationships, and past investments will return profits. No coincidence those predictions go hand-in-hand, even the cosmos knows the only way you can find love is with money.

PISCES
February 19 - March 20

According to the stars, living in harmony with your spouse or partner is in store for you this month. Which one of you falls into a coma remains to be seen.

Life Before the Beat Generation

CAT & HIS GIRL
BY HERBERT E. HUNCKE

Edited By Jerome Poynton Literary Executor

Several years ago – when I was comparatively new on the scene involving most of the people I've come to know since then (and their activities) and when I was still unable to recognize or distinguish who comprised the hardcore group from those similar to myself who had just fallen on the scene, or had been part of it only a short while – I met a very beautiful young girl who, at the time, was one of the people I saw regularly.

She was coupled with a cat whose reputation was of a questionable nature insofar his relationships with women was concerned and I recall distinctly wondering how it was that anyone as apparently hardened as himself could find the patience to spend time with anyone as completely unskilled in the ways of living in this particular type of environment as the girl.

I observed and watched both of them closely.

It was soon evident that his interest was at best superficial and – instead of possessing any deep regard for her – he held her in contempt and was merely using her as a means of keeping himself in pocket money – since she always had money that she supposedly obtained from her parents which she promptly turned over to him.

They lived in my apartment for a while and I got to know both of them.

Frequently he would disappear for a day or two at a time and she would sit around waiting for him to return – watching and listening to the innumerable other people who were either permanent residents of the place or who came and went constantly.

Most of these people were engaged in some creative endeavor or another and possessed, in most instances, a full-scale temperamental nature usually associated with the idea of the typical artist which they seldom made an effort to curb or control, and I remember thinking she was amazingly calm and seemingly undisturbed by the constant flare-ups of temper and erratic behavior of her acquaintances – especially if (as I suspected) she came from the ordinary middle-class background of present-day society.

Much of what was happening was certainly unconventional and extreme and I couldn't help but wonder at her not being obviously shocked. But if she was surprised ever, she succeeded in effectively keeping it to herself, never in my presence revealing the slightest degree of anything being other than what she had been accustomed to most of her life.

Her personal conduct remained shy and unassuming – retaining always evidence of nothing more than what one might expect from any ordinary, conventionally raised young girl.

Her appearance was striking mostly because of her very vivid coloring. Her facial features were very finely moulded and impressed on with their delicacy of line. Her eyes were a deep rich brown – a trifle sad in expression. Her hair was a rich chestnut brown – slightly unruly and falling to her shoulders in length and accentuating the cameo quality of her face.

Her skin was very pale except for her cheeks which were always slightly flushed and tinged with pink. Her mouth was full-shaped and red. She seldom smiled but when she did – her whole face lit up and one felt one's self-gladdened just seeing her.

She was not very tall and although at first glance seemed thin, was in fact full-figured with rather large breasts and well-rounded hips. She had long legs – beautifully shaped – and was perhaps a bit vain about them, because one of the few times I saw her lose her composure was when she discovered a run in her stockings and refused to leave until someone got her a new pair.

Occasionally we would find ourselves alone in the apartment and it was then I got to know her a little better and began taking a personal interest in her. Prior to the first time we talked together I had accepted her along with the rest of the scene as charming to look at but hardly anyone I might become more intimately involved with. There were any number of beautiful girls around, and besides, I didn't much care for the cat she was making it with and therefore, other than observing her, I made no effort to get to know her.

The first time we spoke, we had been in the apartment about an hour and I was busy straightening and sorting a stack of drawings that someone had done and left in a pile and scattered around my room. She approached me hesitantly and asked me for a cigarette. I gave her one – extracting one from the package for myself – and while I was lighting it she leaned over and took a light also, then drew back and said, "I think I like you. You don't seem mean and selfish like most of the others around here. Tell me, do you like Gore, the fellow I'm with?

I was a bit startled by her directness and since I didn't care much for Gore, hesitated a moment before replying. She noticed my hesitancy and spoke again saying, "I don't think you do like him. I've noticed you seldom speak to him."

"No, I don't," I said. "Frankly, I don't think I trust him – not that he has done anything to me personally – but somehow there is something about the manner in which he speaks to people that makes me feel he is false."

She sort of bobbed her head up and down in agreement as I was speaking and when I had finished she said, "That is how I feel, also. I don't know exactly how I became involved with him and I want to get away from him – but I like all of these people and this place. You see, my mother and father think I am insane. They have had me locked up twice. The last time I ran away, they caught me and I had to go back and now I am out on probation. My parents hate me and I hate them and I am willing to do almost anything to get away from them. When I was twelve – I'm seventeen now – they caught me having sex with a neighbor boy and they raised a lot of hell. My mother said I was depraved and my father called me whore and beat me and I fought him with a knife and he was cut. Now they don't leave me alone for one minute and I have to sneak out of the house, and when I do I stay away for days and they look for me. They have reported me to the probation officer – and when they catch me – I'll have to go back into the hospital again. They give me money and sometimes I steel it from my mother's cash box or my father's pockets. Gore wants money and I can't get him any right now. He said I should try turning tricks and maybe I will."

She said all this in a rush and sat looking at me as though she expected me to immediately solve all her problems. I was startled by her sudden outburst and her story had made me sad. There was nothing I could say or do to reassure her or perhaps help her. I did suggest she think about tricking a little longer before trying it – telling her she should wait and – if she was going to do anything of that nature – she would be wiser to wait until she found someone to make it with and I was sure Gore would only cause her pain and unhappiness.

After that she remained around the place a few more days and then disappeared. I asked Gore about her and he said she was a dumb broad and had probably been sent back to the hospital again and he hoped to fuck he'd never see her again.

Several months passed and one day, walking on Avenue C, I ran into her. She was looking very well and seemed glad to see me. We sat in a little restaurant and drank coffee and talked. She said she had gone back but out again had met some other cat whom she liked and who she guessed liked her although there wasn't love between them. She was happier than she had been. She said she had turned on junk several times and liked it. She had apparently managed to come to some agreement with her parents and she was now allowed more freedom of action.

From then on we would occasionally meet and she kept me posted concerning events in her life. Once or twice she had obviously been straight on schmeck and once she asked me to cop for her. And then one day she met me and told me she had fallen in love. He was a spade cat and beautiful, she said. I wished her well and said I'd like to meet the cat.

I didn't see her again for almost six months, and when I did, I was unprepared for the extreme change in her whole personality. She had grown sharp and somewhat hard. She had changed her hairstyle and was wearing more makeup. She said she was tricking regularly and doing very well. She had a habit and wanted me to cop for herself and her old man. I copped for her and we made a meet for later when she would have some more bread and I could cop for her again.

From then on, I saw her steadily, and although I heard of her love from others and from her, I never met him. Then again she disappeared – and that was the last I saw of her until about six months ago. Again she was taking junk but this time alone. She and her old man had parted. She had grown visibly older and was seemingly reconciled to her loneliness.

Meanwhile, I had met her ex-lover. I had heard that he was a mean cat and had treated her badly, so I was a bit reluctant about developing his acquaintance. But gradually, after we had become better acquainted, I liked him. He is quite handsome and has never given me cause to mistrust him. We have never become close friends but I have learned to respect him over many others.

We had never spoken for any length of time until the other night – when he began speaking about how they had first met and how deeply in love he had fallen for her.

"You know man," he said, "I really wanted to make a go of it with her. I guess it was mostly her family that messed us up. In the beginning, we both had jobs and were getting along really great until her father discovered I am a Negro. Man – he really came on – at one point saying 'I know how to handle niggers.' He took her home, and as soon as she could, she ran away and came back. From then on we stayed more or less in hiding. She had become disgusted and started going out on dates some girl she knew would arrange for her. She began making money and would come home sometimes with two or three hundred dollars. Whether you can believe this or not, I have always disliked the idea of a chick hustling or of my living off the bread she'd bring in. But at the time, there seemed to be nothing else to do. Anyway, our lives became hectic – we were using junk, and twice she Od'd and I thought I'd lost her. We had managed to avoid her parents for a while but they had hired detectives, and one Sunday afternoon, they came in on us and she was dragged home.

Again, the same routine took place – she came back, we hid, she hustled, and we shot junk. By this time, we were beginning to get on each other's nerves and our little affair was strictly on the skids. At one point, we thought maybe if we could get married, we still could make it. I called her mother and father and made an appointment to see them. I kept the appointment and talked to them, asked them to let us get married. Her father almost had a stroke and swore he would see her dead before he'd allow her to marry any black-assed son of a bitch.

There was nothing to do but accept the situation as it stood, but we both knew it was almost over. Finally one day, during one of the panics, about two hours after she had left on her dates, I got a call from Harlem Hospital – she had been rushed to the emergency ward after being severely beaten and found unconscious, but was doing alright and wanted me to come and pick her up. She had been worked over badly and her face was almost frightening to see. I took her home with me, and during the four or five days of her recovery we decided to call it quits. And that was that. Once in a while we run into each other, and she is doing OK but somehow she has changed. She stays high most of the time and makes it first with one, then another. All she really wanted was love but I guess it is the one thing she least apt to ever get."

I had listened to him quietly, and when he was finished I could only think of how tragic the story was and of the vast amount of stupidity and cruelty inflicted on the two of them and how little chance she ever had of discovering any kind of happiness.
